the two groups display different dynamics, with no isochronal synchrony between them, but the nodes in a single group are isochronally synchronized, even though there is no intragroup coupling. we compare experimental behavior with theoretical and numerical results. doi: 10.1103/physrevlett.110.064104 pacs numbers: 05.45.xt, 89.75. k a unifying definition of synchronization for dynamical systems - if the properties agree then the systems are synchronized. the remainder of this paper formalizes this intuitive defini-tion of synchronization by explicitly addressing each require-ment, and applying the proposed definition to examples. we begin by separating the dynamics of the large sys-tems into the dynamics of subsystems. let  $f(z_0)$  denote a
